SPRING/SUMMER 2009
A LISTING GUIDE TO RESTAURANTS IN MARIN

According to foodie folklore, the world's first restaurant to offer a menu of dining options was an 18th century Parisian soup house called Boulanger, which implored, in bold letters above the front door, "Come unto me, all ye that labor in the stomach, and I will restore you."

More than 200 years later, and several latitudes west, Marin restaurateurs carry on Monsieur Boulanger's promise of restoration (it's from where we derive the term restaurant). And, best of all, one doesn't have to stroll the Rue Montorgueil to find world-class cuisine—such avenues as Throckmorton, Bridgeway and Sir Francis Drake will quell our laborious stomachs just the same.

But no Marin geo-gastronomical exploration would be complete without the hunger-helping hand of the Pacific Sun's summer 2009 Menus of Marin. This exhaustive dining guide—now organized by town—highlights hundreds of local restaurants throughout the county (check out PacificSun.com for our searchable listings and reviews—or post your own!)

Come unto us, all ye that labor in the stomach—and Marin will restore you!

“WHERE’S THE BEEF?” IS NO LONGER THE QUESTION

MEET DOUG STONEBREAKER OF PRATHER RANCH MEAT CO. & DAVID EVANS OF MARIN SUN FARMS

It's time that meat eaters start asking a whole new set of questions: Where's the beef from? Was the cow raised humanely? Were the ranchers good stewards of the land? Was the animal's life taken with respect?

As you're grilling up your Sirloin Steak, these may be hard questions to stomach, but they are necessary first steps toward creating a more transparent, trustworthy, and healthy meat industry. We believe it's just as important to know your rancher as it is to know your farmer. Doug and David are happy to answer any questions you have about how their animals are raised. They'll even invite you out to see the ranch.

Now that's transparency you won't see anywhere else.
